

Most period apps sound certain. Bodies aren't.

A cycle tracker built to be honest about what it knows — and just as honest about what it doesn't.

In Sync With Your Cycle.

LUNARFLOW

Swipe →

PROMISE ONE

We will never show you a percentage.

A number like "3.2% chance today" feels precise. It isn't. It's a calendar estimate wearing a lab coat.

And a low number doesn't read as uncertain — it reads as permission. So LunarFlow shows a qualitative range instead, and never uses the word "safe" anywhere near it.

LunarFlow is not a contraceptive method.

When we're not sure, we say nothing.

Below a certain confidence, the ovulation marker disappears. So does the fertile window. So does its entry in the legend.

A prediction we don't trust isn't shown in a lighter font. It isn't shown.

Most trackers degrade quietly and let you assume. We'd rather show you an honest gap.

Why we ask so much before you start.

Eleven questions is a lot. Here's the trade you're making.

A tracker that knows your contraception, your cycle history and your body can tell you something true on day one. A tracker that knows nothing can only show you a calendar and hope.

Your last period

Cycle length

Contraception

Age at first period

What you're tracking for

THE QUESTIONS

Every question has a way out.

None

None of these

Not today

I'm not sure

Prefer not to say

Each of these is a real answer we save — not a blank we skip past.

Because "I've never had that" and "nobody asked me" are completely different things, and only one of them is useful to you or your doctor later.

Your method changes what we show you.

If your contraception stops ovulation, a fertile window isn't uncertain — it's false. So we take it away entirely.

WINDOW REMOVED

Combined pill ·
Progestogen-only pill ·
Hormonal IUD · Implant ·
Injection · Patch · Ring

WINDOW KEPT

Copper IUD ·
Sterilisation · Barrier
methods — ovulation continues, so the signal is real

Removing a window that was genuinely there would be its own kind of lie.

Encrypted on your phone.

Your logs live in an encrypted database on your device, with a key only your phone holds. We verified that on real hardware — not just in a test.

And the part most apps leave out:

Your cloud backup is not end-to-end encrypted yet. We'd rather tell you that here than let you assume it.

A report your doctor can actually read.

Export your cycles, symptoms, pain and patterns as a clean PDF to bring to an appointment.

- Free, always. We don't paywall the thing you might need in a waiting room.
- Intimate details are left out by default — it's a document you hand to another person.
- LunarFlow points at patterns worth discussing. It never diagnoses, and never scores your body.

Knowing more. Claiming less.

That's the whole idea. A tracker that earns what it tells you, and admits the rest.

In Sync With Your Cycle.

